King with Basket

Archaeologist's notes: This bronze statue shows King Ur-Nammu carrying a basket of bricks on his head. This is most likely a symbol for one of the king's main responsibilities—to build and maintain the temples. In reality, the king would not have done the actual work himself. The inscription around the body of the statue records the restoration of the temple of Inana, the patron god of Uruk.